“Creativity and Spirit: The Foundation of Community”
– by Tobey Crockett, Ph.D.

In recent years, Tobey Crockett has dedicated herself to researching and understanding digital media – what makes it different from what has come before, what is the true nature of interactivity and what does this have to do with the real world and our daily lives? What she has learned is that by focusing on creating healthy, diverse and vibrant communities, both online and in the real world, we can indeed build a better world.

Tobey writes: Once again I am offering a thought-provoking talk at Carol and Richard King's inspiring salon at their stunning home which they have recently arranged to gift to USC in the future. This is an intimate setting, with a strong following of salon attendees and I encourage you to come if this is appealing, despite the early hour on a Sunday morning. They do serve coffee.

Please RSVP to Carol if you plan to come.

In March 2009, the Pasadena City Council officially designated the Kings' home, designed for them in 1979 by architects Conrad Buff III, FAIA, and Donald C. Hensman, FAIA, a Historic Monument. In addition, the Kings' have arranged for the future gift of their home and an endowment for its maintenance to the School of Architecture/University of Southern California. Through this gift, Arroyo del Rey will be preserved in perpetuity and in the future will be The Carol Soucek King and Richard King Center for Architecture, Arts and the Humanities/University of Southern California.
